

Construction Defects

A construction project from concept to completion is an amazing accomplishment. There are so many intricacies in bringing a design to life, which is why Niles Barton's Construction Defects Group responds quickly to resolve issues as they arise. We understand that deadlines, money, jobs, and contracts are at stake, so we step in immediately to help our client and to minimize the impact on the construction project. Our experience helps the attorneys on our team understand how the trades and subcontractors involved all interlock. This means we are able to focus on the heart of the problem, be it a contractual dispute, a change order, a mechanic's lien, or allegations of defective work.

Niles Barton also regularly works with property owners experiencing construction defect problems to investigate the cause of the building issues and to prosecute those claims

Niles Barton's construction team works with clients at the beginning of each project to ensure that their rights under the contract terms and agreements are protected. Our attorneys also have extensive litigation experience in state and federal courts, and when possible, we help clients avoid the courtroom through alternative dispute resolution and mediation techniques. Our construction practice represents property owners, contractors, subcontractors, developers, architects, engineers, municipalities, suppliers, and bonding companies in a variety of business, construction, condemnation and eminent domain, surety bond, and insurance matters throughout the mid-Atlantic region.
